

Insurance is Confusing

But it doesn't have to be.

Insurance has always been confusing especially when it comes to eye exams. It's possible you may have Routine Exam coverage in addition to your Medical insurance coverage.

Routine Eye Exam

Medical Eye Exam

How are they different?

Routine eye exam coverage is designed to pay toward a comprehensive eye exam that looks for but finds no medical problems.

Medical insurance pays toward eye exams that are medical in nature. Examples of medical visits include:

- Eye Infection
- Dry Eyes
- Loss of vision
- Eyelid styte
- Floaters
- Cataract
- Glaucoma
- Diabetes

What do they pay toward?

Routine coverage often pays for the exam and an eyeglasses prescription.

Please call the number on the back of your insurance card for your specific coverage details.

When there is a medical diagnosis like diabetes, cataracts or the examples above, we are REQUIRED to submit the exam as medical, not routine.

In most cases a comprehensive exam that is medical in nature does not pay for an eyeglasses prescription. Deductible and coinsurance apply.
